Today, my aunt is going to take me to a big bonfire in the evening. She says that it is to remember a very important moment in her country's history. About 400 years ago, a man wanted to blow up the parliament building and kill the king.

I'm visiting my cousin and learning a lot about his country. In the morning, I watched a big parade, then we had a picnic with my cousin's family and friends in the local park. In the evening, I watched an amazing firework display.

What a day it was! In the morning, I went with my friends to the forest and cleaned it up – we picked up a lot of old rubbish, plastic bottles, and glass. We talked a lot, had a lot of fun, and at the same time, helped to protect the environment. After this, we made a campfire by the river, sang some songs, and played some games.
